UNION NOMINATIONS.

FOR GOVERNOR.

Gen. J. L. CHAMBERLAIN

For Representatives in Congress,
1st Dist.—JOHN LYNDEN, of Portland.
3d Dist.—JAMES G. BLAINE, of Bangor.

4th Dist.—JOHN A. PETERS, of Bangor.

What General Chamberlain Says.

All that unite in demanding security for the future, we must have security good and sufficient, against any future attempt to destroy the Government, whether in the exercise of the right of self-defense, or by more artful and insidious means. ASSAULTS against the principles of the Union, and the rights of the people, are points we cannot yield without danger and dishonor; and when the Southern States are admitted with those conditions in good faith, they will be in a position to ask assistance and fellowship with the loyal community of the country which they deserted with violence and scorn. LYNDEN has risked his life in the cause of the Union in strict proportion.

One of the "Reconstructed," who are ready to return without conditions, according to President Johnson.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette writing from Nashville, gives a very interesting account of a conversation with an ex-officer, who served first as a line officer, afterwards as a member of Joe Johnston's staff, of S. D. Lee's, and finally of the unlucky Hood's.

Your correspondent "keeps" a small album, which, as pictures were under discussion, he brought out, and handed for inspection to the rebel friend. The first photograph in it is that of a Union officer, Major General G. C. and mingled with those of individuals of no little note, a small, faded picture of many other prominent Union generals.

WHAT AN ALBUM SHOULD CONTAIN. The ex-rebel examined the collection attentively to the end, listening with interest while I told him the names of each of the persons represented as he did not know, and added a brief word of explanation concerning each.

As he remarked, "that your pictures of soldiers include prominent men from only one army." He continued, "if your album contained pictures of the prominent Confederate as well as Union generals."

I endeavored to steer out to sea by remarking that my preference was for Union generals; but I had no objection to any one who liked the others better. I finished his album with them.

STRANGE IDEA OF HONOR. My friend appeared resolved to press the point. "There are plenty of nice portraits of General Lee and others to be obtained," he said; "wouldn't you like to have some of them?"

"Why not?" I replied, "I should hope that the generals, they would as speedily as possible be forgotten."

"Why don't you think they were as good men as those whose pictures you have?"

"Private gentlemen," said I, "they may once have been so. As privates, colonels, as presidents of colleges, as railway superintendents, I can, if they conduct themselves properly, respect them even now. But in that which brought them prominently before the public, I regard them as bad men, and think that for their sakes the sooner it is forgotten the better."

"Well, I am sure I don't see why," the rebel officer persisted, "certainly they fought honorably, and came out of the contest with honor at its close. And it seems to me that, in order to produce harmony, the same respect should be shown to Lee and his subordinates that is shown to Grant and his."

"Whether people act honorably or not," said Judge M. at this point, "depends upon the nature of the action in which they are engaged. We have no objection to Lee's overthrowing the government of our common country as an honorable one, and we would not feel justified in lending our countenance thereto, by hanging the pictures of those prominently engaged in it about our parlors, or even by putting them in our albums."

It would have been refreshing to see our Northern friends to see the look of surprise which overcame the rebel gentleman's countenance. He turned to me, "You do not think these men were engaged in an honorable war?"

"On the contrary," I replied, "nothing could have been more mischievous, dishonorable and wicked."

"Why, how in the world," said he, "can it be dishonorable for a man to fight for his country?"

"There, my friend," I answered, "is the very error into which so many of our Southern people have fallen. You have lost the distinction between patriotism and treason."

"What, in every age of the world, and according to every code of morals and laws, is regarded as the highest of crimes, you consider a laudable enterprise, and you speak of that as 'fighting for your country,' which was in reality a rebellious attempt to take the life of your country, by cutting it in twain."

OUR COUNTRY.

"Well," said he, "I consider the South as my country; and if we are ever reconciled to the North, she will have to meet us as equals. It can be done in no other way."

"And do you not consider the United States your country now?"

"I suppose I do," he replied, laughing; "at least until another rebellion breaks out!"

"And do you think there will be another rebellion?" I inquired.

"Not if the United States government acts properly," was the reply; "but Southern blood won't stand any oppression."

"I suppose," said I, "that Southerners intend to obey the laws?"

"O, of course," he replied, "I intend to do that as long as there is peace."

"That is," he said, "you will be obedient to the laws as long as you are compelled to."

"That's about the idea," was the candid reply.

"And do you think," said I, "the government should feel grateful to you for such obedience as that?"

"I need I do," he answered; "I think it should feel grateful for every hour I do not fight against it."

never recognized your right so to be. It insisted you were committing treason all the time. But if we were organized as enemies, how could we be traitors?"

"The characters are entirely consistent," I answered. "The one traitor, the one assassin, for traitors are the worst enemies a country can have."

TRAITORS TO THE SOUTH. "Well," said he, "I cannot see it in that way. I think both parties were engaged in honorable warfare. I don't think any of the loss of a Northern man who fought in the Federal army. I consider that the only traitors in the whole business were those Southern men who fought against the South."

"Why," said I, "they looked upon the whole United States as their country. How can you blame them for continuing faithful to it, when you and others were striving to destroy it?"

"Very well," he replied, with more warmth than he had yet manifested. "I say they were traitors. I despise them myself, and I shall teach my children to hate them forever!"

DEFINITION OF MY "COUNTRY." "And you think, then," said I, "that a man should regard his country the Federal territory. I consider that the only traitors in the whole business were those Southern men who fought against the South."

"Certainly," said he, "did I not understand you to say that you considered the United States your country, for the present at least?"

"Yes," I replied, "I would suppose a rebellion should break out against the government in New England, would you not assist to suppress it?"

"If I didn't live in New England I would; if I did, I wouldn't."

The Times denies that Gen. Chamberlain is in a position to require conditions before the admission of rebel members to the White House. A more barbed untruth was never uttered. As though Gen. C. would be in favor of the admission of "rebel members" under any circumstances.

Well, our neighbor does beat the Artful Dodger entirely. Suppose we say "members from rebel States," instead of "rebel members." That is what we meant, and the sentence will then be correct. The Times accuses us of want of fairness in not stating "the real question of difference between us."

If we should undertake to state the real position of that paper, as set forth by itself, we should need a paper as large as the London Times with all its supplements. We state the difference in as few words as possible, viz., that its "position" is that of a thinly disguised Johnson paper, opposed in reality to the new constitutional amendment, (President Johnson being opposed to it) while claiming all the time to be in harmony with the Union party which has openly, by its resolutions, and by the leading speakers of its conventions, given its full adhesion to the Congressional policy and, in so doing, repudiated the course and policy of the President.

The Times cannot support both Congress and the President in the matter of reconstruction—and it cannot so obfuscate the people of Bangor by its everlasting involved explanations as to make them believe that it is possible to ride both those horses. We have no objection whatever to the Times being a Johnson paper, if it wants to be, but we do object to its attempt to drag the friends of General Chamberlain into the new Johnson party. If we are "unfair" in this, let the editor say, in so many words, that he is opposed to President Johnson's policy.

We have endeavored faithfully to understand the Times's latest explanation of its position; but will honestly own that we cannot do it, and we have not seen the man who carried three lines from it yesterday which seemed pretty plain, viz:

With the proclamation of peace all right of the Federal government to impose conditions not provided for in the Constitution, ceased.

But the editor now calls it a "garbled extract" and says he did not mean any such thing only this:

What we do claim, is that the formal declaration of peace restored the obligations and privileges of the Constitution over all the territory of the United States, and that the rebellion was a rebellion against the Constitution, and not against the Government.

If anybody understands that we have no objection to stating it, we must say we understand the President's denying the right of Congress to exclude members from rebel States as a condition of ratification, and understand the Times as saying to agree with President Johnson, under the same time to agree with Congress, which claims that it has that right. We hope we shall not be obliged to refer to the Times again.

[Gen. Chamberlain] does not intimate in the remotest degree that we should "renew guarantees" in any other way than by denial of representation, "association and fellowship." [Times]

Of course that is the way he would "renew" them, and the way that we and the Union party would enforce them. But the President says no. Congress must not deny representation. The exclusion of loyal representatives properly chosen is revolutionary and unjust. He says nothing but "Judge of the election returns and qualifications of members." Does not the Times agree with him?

A WALK ACROSS KUMPER BY A BOY. A feat of courage and perseverance has just been accomplished by a French boy of thirteen. Three months ago, dissatisfied with his treatment by an uncle in Paris, he started on a journey to his mother, who is married to a second husband, a French workman in the employ of the Shah at Teheran. With the aid of a map and guide-book he tramped across Europe, receiving such hospitality by the way that, on reaching Constantinople, he had still nearly half his francs remaining. After a short rest in Pera, he crossed the Bosphorus, on his way to Persia, but, a little beyond Scutari, was stopped by some Turkish policemen and brought back till an interpreter was found. His story being thus learned, he was passed over to Pera and placed in charge of the French Consul, in which capacity he now is, enabled to undertake to serve out his term. The only explanation given is, that while out of prison he got married—it would be ungrateful to say anything more.

PORTLAND, Me., June 28.

A severe thunder shower passed over this vicinity yesterday afternoon.

At Windham a lady 30 years old was instantly killed—a girl 12 years fatally and an old lady slightly injured by lightning while setting together.
